

Research powers the future

The University's contribution to the community is of major significance. In 2007 alone Sydney researchers have been awarded over 120 research projects by the Australian Research Council and 97 new Discovery Grants, considerably more than our closest national competitors.

The University has 171 research centres and institutes and ranks first among Australian universities in the number of research licences granted and start-up companies launched. Researchers and students at the University are increasing our understanding of such challenges as global warming, drought, childhood disease, cancer, and many more.

Our researchers and alumni have received worldwide acclaim – in science and business as well as in sport and the arts. A gift from you today will help ensure that this proud tradition continues.
